

Sediment samples collected through May 16, 2010 along the Gulf coast did not reveal elevated levels of chemicals usually found in oil.

Sediment samples taken to date indicate that there may be contaminants present at some locations, which pose risks to aquatic life.

It is unknown whether the sediment contamination can be attributed to the BP Spill.